Charges Dropped on Gambuzza from 2021!

Here at the Daily Edition whenever a person is charged with a crime it is printed as a story. Sometimes those cases are dismissed in court and those people charged don't get the chance to let others know. Recently one of those cases occurred and the person saw the charges against them dismissed in court and here is his story in his words the same as the original story was the words of the officer. Thanks so much for taking the time to defend yourself Mr. Gambuzza.

I was wrongfully arrested for allegedly trying to hit my sister but in actuality I tried to hit her friend that was a guy for running his mouth at me all night long. He was making comments about my Tourette Syndrome. The reason they tried to say I attempted to hit her was because she stepped in the middle of it and tried to break it up, unfortunately

Bacteria that Causes Rare Disease Melioidosis Discovered in U.S. Environmental Samples

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) has identified for the first time in domestic environmental samples the bacteria that causes a rare and serious disease called melioidosis. The bacteria, Burkholderia pseudomallei or B. pseudomallei, was identified through sampling of soil and water in the Gulf Coast region of Mississippi.

It is unclear how long the bacteria has been in the environment and where else it might be found in the U.S.; however, modeling suggests that the environmental conditions found in the Gulf Coast states are conducive to the growth of B. pseudomallei. CDC is alerting clinicians throughout the country of this discovery through a national health advisory, reminding them to be aware of the signs and symptoms of melioidosis and to consider melioidosis in patients that present with symptoms of the disease.

Two unrelated individuals living in close geographic proximity in the Gulf Coast region of the southern United States became sick with melioidosis she stepped in as I was trying to land a punch on her male friend who is in his mid 20's. I luckily missed them both and never touched anyone. My sister and her friend left but were not angry and didn't want to call the police. They were not angry because I made contact with no one. The police came about 45 minutes later and made contact with me as I was getting into the shower to get ready to go to bed. My mother Belinda Gambuzza was the one who called the police. She was upset at me at the time and saw an opportunity to get back at me. So she had an opportunity and she took it. Although the ironic part was she was the one who bailed me out ($1000 bond) and paid for my attorney Donald A. Bosch. My sister or the gentlemen "Adam" I tried to hit did not want to call the police, so my mother who was no involved in anyway decided to. She was the one who claimed I was "mentally unstable" but has no evidence to back that claim up. She wanted to make sure she said anything she could to have me arrested that night. She successfully succeeded and I was taken into custody. I spend roughly 17 hours in custody before she bailed me out for $100 (10% of 1000). After the Loudon County ADA reviewed all the evidence, he decided there was not enough evidence to indite me and the sole charge was dropped. The judge agreed and I was free to go. I spent no more than 45 minutes in the court room for the entire process. As I mentioned before below is a copy of that to support my claim. I in fact was drinking and I won't deny that, but the reason I tried to hit him was because he was running his mouth at me all night long about my Tourette Syndrome. I would never lay a finger on my sister Sydney because our relationship is allot better than that. I also love her dearly. I am just glad justice was served and the charge was dropped. That is the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Disease

two years apart—in 2020 and 2022—prompting state health officials and CDC to take samples and test household products, soil, and water in and around both patients' homes, with permission. Three of the samples taken from soil and puddle water in 2022 tested positive at CDC for B. pseudomallei, indicating bacteria from the environment was the likely source of infection for both individuals and has been present in the area since at least 2020.

Melioidosis is caused by direct contact with B. pseudomallei, which is found in contaminated soil and water. Among the average of 12 melioidosis cases diagnosed in the United States each year, most have occurred in people with recent travel to a country where this bacteria is endemic. Cases of melioidosis have also been linked to contaminated commercial products imported from disease-endemic countries. This recently occurred in 2021 when a cluster of four cases in four states were linked to an imported contaminated aromatherapy spray.

Melioidosis has a wide range of nonspecific symptoms like fever, joint pain, and headaches and can cause conditions that include pneumonia, abscess formation, or blood infections. Worldwide, melioidosis is fatal in 10 – 50% of those infected. B. pseudomallei has historically been found in tropical and sub-tropical areas such as South and Southeast Asia, northern Australia, and parts of Central and South America and Puerto Rico. Given the very small number of cases of melioidosis identified historically in the United States, CDC believes the risk of melioidosis for the general population continues to be very low.

Individuals living in the Gulf Coast of Mississippi and who have health conditions that may put them at higher risk—such as diabetes, chronic kidney disease, chronic lung disease, or excessive alcohol use—should take precautions to protect themselves:

Avoid contact with soil or muddy water, particularly after heavy rains, and protect open wounds with waterproof dressings.

Wear waterproof boots when gardening, doing yard work, or doing agricultural work, which can prevent infection through the feet and lower legs—particularly after flooding or storms.

Wear gloves to protect the hands when working directly with soil.

CDC encourages health-care providers in the Gulf Coast region of the southern United States as well as clinicians throughout the country to learn about melioidosis and to be aware of the potential for more cases as CDC and partners continue to investigate the geographic spread of B. pseudomallei. As a nationally notifiable disease, melioidosis should always be reported to the state health department.

For more information, visit CDC's melioidosis
